

THE BOYFRIEND AND GIRLFRIEND

Ben Grimes, 23, model and designer for LPBG

I was totally attracted to Jackson and his clothes. I think he's a great dresser and looks hot in what he wears. He does a lot of suits, which should be smart, but he never is because he has a sort of scruffy charm about him, which I adore: his dress sense is just like his personality. So I picked out a suit, because he looks really good in them, with the shirt open at the neck. Generally, I like what's in his wardrobe, but there is one coat that I don't like: a shaggy, sheepy, 1970s thing. It has disappeared now. I really want him to start wearing patent dress shoes, not wrinkle-pickers, because I do like a man in proper shoes. We go shopping together, mainly to vintage stores, such as Absolute Vintage or Beyond Retro. He'll go to the men's corner and look at suits and I'll look at dresses in the other. Jackson likes what I've done with my label – he's really proud. He helps me get dressed more than I dress him, to be honest, so if I'm ever badly dressed, it's probably his fault.

Jackson Scott, 27, front man of the band Mano de Dios

I usually dress with a Darjeeling Limited sort of vibe: old suits and neckerchiefs. I like how people used to dress in the 1920s. My favourite outfit is a suit by Jonathan Quearney, a tailor in Soho who's also a friend. What Ben has picked out is lovely. It's crispy and new-looking, which is always nice. I like Richard James, a Savile Row tailor, and Paul Smith, who is also fantastic. □
